Develop an array of easy and practical behavior management skills that really work

Attendees learn strategies to strengthen relationships, increase equity, reduce frustration, and, foster independence in the classroom which are based on more than 50,000 classroom observations.

Attendees acquire skills to gain attention, improve engagement, and create an environment where students have clear direction on how to practice and apply what they have learned, which give the teacher space to support the learning while they maintain positive relationships with students.

Attendees leave this workshop with a set of foundational tools focused on classroom management that support all students using purposeful and deliberate communication to strengthen student voice, ownership, and independence with curriculum.

This highly engaging and interactive course offers a plethora of aids and tips that are immediately useable and allow participants to:

- Be even more proactive and equitable in their practice
- Develop approaches to support individuals and keep the rest of the group engaged in learning simultaneously
- Increase flexibility and reduce surprise
- Keep the focus on relationships instead of student behavior
- Support facilitation of group discussions and increase student voice
